Personal, social, health and economic education in schools (England)

By Robert Long

Inside:
1. PSHE: position on the curriculum
2. Children and Social Work Act 2017: statutory PSHE?
3. PSHE provision
4. Calls for statutory PSHE and earlier Government rejection
Contents

One page briefing 3

1. PSHE: position on the curriculum 4
   1.1 Personal, social, health and economic education (PSHE) 4
   PSHE Association 5
   Nicky Morgan speech March 2015 5
   Other funded bodies 6
   PSHE Expert Group 6
   1.2 Sex and relationship education (SRE) 6

   2.1 Call for evidence 8

3. PSHE provision 10
   3.1 Ofsted report on PSHE provision (2013) 10
   3.2 Teaching 10

4. Calls for statutory PSHE and earlier Government rejection 12
   4.1 Education Committee report and recommendation for statutory PSHE 12
       Joint letter from select committee Chairs (January 2016) 13
   4.2 Women and Equalities Committee inquiry and Government response 13
       New letter from select committee Chairs (November 2016) 14
   4.3 Government decision not to make PSHE statutory (February 2016) 14
       Subsequent Government comment and reconsideration 15
   4.4 Legislative proposals 15
       Labour Government plans 15
       Labour commitment to statutory PSHE (2016) 16
       Recent Private Members’ Bills 17
       Amendment to Psychoactive Substances Bill 17
   4.5 Support for statutory PSHE 18
   4.6 Opposition to statutory status 19
One page briefing

What is PSHE?
The PSHE Association defines personal, social, health and economic education (PSHE) as:

…a planned programme of learning through which children and young people acquire the knowledge, understanding and skills they need to manage their lives, now and in the future.

What provision do schools have to make?
PSHE is a non-statutory subject, but the Government expects all schools to make provision for it.

In September 2013, following an internal review, the Department for Education issued new guidance on PSHE, which makes clear that it is largely up to schools to determine what is taught; it also states that the then Government did not intend to publish new non-statutory programmes of study for PSHE.

The Government provides funding to various bodies, principally the PSHE Association, to support the teaching of PSHE.

Children and Social Work Act 2017: statutory PSHE?
In March 2017, the Education Secretary, Justine Greening, announced her intention to put Relationships and Sex Education on a statutory footing. She also announced her intention to create a power to make PSHE statutory in future, following further work and consultation.

The Children and Social Work Act 2017 provides for PSHE to be made statutory at all schools in England through regulations. A call for evidence on PSHE teaching is running from December 2017 - February 2018.

PSHE Association programme of study
The PSHE Association has published its own programme of study for PSHE, covering Key Stages 1-5.

The programme includes focus on a variety of areas, including diversity and equality, relationships of different kinds, personal financial choices, drugs education, the importance of respecting and protecting the environment, and people’s rights and responsibilities as members of families and other groups, and as citizens.

Concerns and calls for statutory PSHE
Concerns have regularly been raised about the quality of PSHE provision, by Ofsted and others, often focused on the priority given to the subject and the level of expertise available in PSHE teaching.

There have been regular calls for PSHE to be made statutory, often driven by the belief that this greater priority would improve PSHE provision. Campaigns for PSHE to be made statutory have met with resistance, particularly from groups who believe that the topics covered in PSHE are primarily the responsibility of parents.
1. PSHE: position on the curriculum

1.1 Personal, social, health and economic education (PSHE)

Personal, social, health and economic education (PSHE) is taught in schools across England. The PSHE Association defines PSHE as:

...a planned programme of learning through which children and young people acquire the knowledge, understanding and skills they need to manage their lives, now and in the future.\(^1\)

PSHE is a non-statutory subject. However, the National Curriculum Framework states that:

All schools should make provision for personal, social, health and economic education (PSHE), drawing on good practice. Schools are also free to include other subjects or topics of their choice in planning and designing their own programme of education.\(^2\)

In September 2013, the Department for Education issued new guidance on PSHE, which makes clear that it is largely up to schools to determine what is taught; it also states that the then Government did not intend to publish new non-statutory programmes of study for PSHE.

Personal, social, health and economic (PSHE) education is an important and necessary part of all pupils’ education. All schools should teach PSHE, drawing on good practice, and this expectation is outlined in the introduction to the proposed new national curriculum.

PSHE is a non-statutory subject. To allow teachers the flexibility to deliver high-quality PSHE we consider it unnecessary to provide new standardised frameworks or programmes of study. PSHE can encompass many areas of study. Teachers are best placed to understand the needs of their pupils and do not need additional central prescription.

However, while we believe that it is for schools to tailor their local PSHE programme to reflect the needs of their pupils, we expect schools to use their PSHE education programme to equip pupils with a sound understanding of risk and with the knowledge and skills necessary to make safe and informed decisions.

Schools should seek to use PSHE education to build, where appropriate, on the statutory content already outlined in the national curriculum, the basic school curriculum and in statutory guidance on: drug education, financial education, sex and relationship education (SRE) and the importance of physical activity and diet for a healthy lifestyle.\(^3\)

The new guidance followed a review of PSHE carried out by the Coalition Government, which reported in March 2013, separately from...

---

1. PSHE Association, What is PSHE and why is it important? [accessed 15 September 2015]
3. Department for Education, Personal, social, health and economic education, 11 September 2013 its review of the National Curriculum. The Summary Report of the consultation on PSHE education (which includes discussion of sex and relationship education) sets out the views of the respondents to that consultation.\(^4\)

PSHE Association

The Government provides grant funding to the PSHE Association to work with schools to advise them in developing their own PSHE curriculums and improve the quality of teaching.

The association focuses on signposting schools to resources and in expanding their Chartered Teacher of PSHE programme. The Government has also asked the association to promote the teaching of consent as part of SRE.\(^6\)

The PSHE Association has published its own programme of study for PSHE, covering Key Stages 1-5. The programme has three core themes:

- Health and Wellbeing
- Relationships
- Living in the Wider World

Within these headings the programme includes focus on a variety of areas, including diversity and equality, relationships of different kinds, personal financial choices, drugs education, the importance of respecting and protecting the environment, and people’s rights and responsibilities as members of families and other groups, and as citizens.\(^7\)

Nicky Morgan speech March 2015

In March 2015, the then Education Secretary made a speech to the Bright Blue think tank which made announcements on further initiatives on PSHE alongside the PSHE Association:

> We will establish a new charter mark for schools in conjunction with the PSHE Association. This will be awarded to schools that demonstrate excellence in this area in order to give schools something to strive for in improving their PSHE teaching, and making it easier for schools struggling in this area to work with the best.

[...]

And later this week we will launch new guidance, produced by the association on one of the most important and sensitive areas of PSHE teaching: consent.

The new guidance will build on an existing programme of work between the Department and the PSHE Association, and will give

---

\(^4\) Written Ministerial Statement at HC Deb 21 Mar 2013 c52WS

\(^5\) Department for Education, Consultation on PSHE Education: Summary Report, March 2013

\(^6\) Department for Education, Personal, social, health and economic education, 11 September 2013

\(^7\) PSHE Association, PSHE programme of study (Key stages 1-4), October 2014 teachers important information about the law on consent, helping them to design effective lessons accordingly.\(^8\)

Other funded bodies
For drug and alcohol education, the Government launched a new evidence-based information service in April 2013 called Mentor-ADEPIS, for those working with young people, including schools and teachers. The new service provides practical advice and tools.

The Government also provides funding to the Centre for the Analysis of Youth Transitions (CAYT) to develop a database of evaluations of programmes aimed at improving outcomes for young people.

PSHE Expert Group
In February 2014, the Department for Education established the PSHE Expert Group, one of 16 expert groups formed in response to the implementation of the new national curriculum. The group comprised of leading professionals in the field of PSHE practice and had a budget of £2,000 to cover meeting expenses.\(^9\)

The Group published a report in November 2014, setting out a variety of recommendations including that PSHE be made a statutory entitlement.\(^10\)

The report stated that “moving forward, the [Expert] group will continue to meet independently of the DfE, under the auspices of the Expert Subject Advisory Group network.”\(^11\)

1.2 Sex and relationship education (SRE)
Sex and relationship education is distinct from PSHE, although many issues relating to SRE may be taught within the PSHE curriculum. As the two subjects are so closely linked, particularly in calls for greater provision, this briefing includes an overview of SRE requirements. The Library briefing on SRE in schools, SN06103, provides more detail on the current position and also on debates regarding possible reform.

Current position
The gov.uk website provides a brief overview of the rules relating to SRE in schools:

Sex and relationship education (SRE) is compulsory from age 11 onwards. It involves teaching children about reproduction, sexuality and sexual health. It doesn’t promote early sexual activity or any particular sexual orientation.

Some parts of sex and relationship education are compulsory - these are part of the national curriculum for science. Parents can withdraw their children from all other parts of sex and relationship education if they want.

---

\(^8\) Rt Hon Nicky Morgan MP, Preparing young people for life in modern Britain, 10 March 2015 [accessed 11 September 2015]

\(^9\) Department for Education Supplementary evidence to the Education Committee, January 2015

\(^10\) Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education Expert Group, Report and Recommendations, November 2014, p4

\(^11\) Ibid., p9
All schools must have a written policy on sex education, which they must make available to parents for free.

Academies and free schools do not have to follow the National Curriculum and so are not under the same statutory obligations as local authority maintained schools. As such, they are not obliged to teach sex and relationship education; unless there is a clause in their funding agreements requiring SRE to be taught. If they do provide it, they must have regard to the SRE guidance issued by the Secretary of State.

12 Unless there is a clause in their funding agreements requiring SRE to be taught.
13 Department for Education and Employment, Sex and Relationship Education Guidance, July 2000
2. Children and Social Work Act 2017: statutory PSHE?

On 1 March 2017, the Education Secretary, Justine Greening, announced her intention to put Relationships and Sex Education on a statutory footing. She also announced her intention to create a power to make PSHE statutory in future, following further work and consultation:

> The amendments [to the Children and Social Work Bill] also create a power enabling the Government to make regulations requiring PSHE to be taught in academies and maintained schools – it is already compulsory in independent schools. By creating a power on PSHE, we are allowing time to consider what the right fit of this subject is with Relationships Education and Relationships and Sex Education.¹⁴

It is intended that the announced changes to Relationships and Sex Education would be in place for teaching to begin in September 2019. No indication has been given of a timetable for the potential introduction of statutory PSHE.

Section 35 of the Children and Social Work Act 2017 provides for PSHE to be made statutory at all schools in England through regulations.

A Policy Statement published alongside the announcement indicated that PSHE would be reviewed, in the context of statutory Relationships and Sex Education, to determine what the subject’s makeup could be with statutory status, under the following ‘broad pillars’:

- Healthy bodies and lifestyles, including keeping safe, puberty, drugs and alcohol education;
- Healthy minds, including emotional wellbeing, resilience, mental health;
- Economic wellbeing and financial capability;
- Careers education, preparation for the workplace and making a positive contribution to society.¹⁵

Information about the proposals for statutory Relationships and Sex Education can be found in the Library briefing Sex and Relationship Education in Schools (England), SN 06103.

2.1 Call for evidence

On 19 December 2017 the Department for Education published a call for evidence on Changes to teaching of sex and relationship education, and PSHE.

Alongside questions about sex and relationship education, the call for evidence asked for views on the most important topics under the umbrella of PSHE for teaching at primary and secondary level, and also

---

¹⁴ HC Deb 1 March 2017, HCWS509
what level of flexibility should be given to schools in teaching PSHE. A separate call for evidence published simultaneously asked young people about what teaching in PSHE they had found most useful, and which subjects not covered they would like to have been taught about.

The call for evidence is open until 12 February 2018.
3. PSHE provision

3.1 Ofsted report on PSHE provision (2013)

Ofsted has published a series of reports on PSHE provision and good practice. The most recent report, Not yet good enough: personal, social, health and economic education in schools, was published in May 2013. The report stated that learning in PSHE education was:

...good or better in 60% of schools and required improvement or was inadequate in 40%...

In the two fifths of schools where learning was weak, pupils had gaps in their knowledge and skills, most commonly in the serious safeguarding areas of personal safety in relation to sex and relationships, mental health, and alcohol misuse.16

3.2 Teaching

The 2013 Ofsted report, stated that the teaching of PSHE required improvement:

Teaching required improvement in 42% of primary and 38% of secondary schools. Too many teachers lacked expertise in teaching sensitive and controversial issues, which resulted in some topics such as sexuality, mental health and domestic violence being omitted from the curriculum. This was because subject-specific training and support were too often inadequate. In 20% of schools, staff had received little or no training to teach PSHE education. Teaching was not good in any of these schools.17

The report recommended that schools should “ensure that staff teaching PSHE education receive subject-specific training and regular updates, including in the teaching of sensitive issues.”18

From 2004 to 2010 the Department for Children, Schools and Families and the Department of Health funded a certificated national programme of PSHE Continuing Professional Development (CPD); the Education Committee recommended in its February 2015 report that this funding be reintroduced.19 The Government rejected this recommendation in its response.20 The response highlighted the PSHE quality mark (see Nicky Morgan speech, on page 5 of this briefing):

To enable schools to demonstrate excellence in the quality of their PSHE teaching, the Government [has] announced the development of a new, rigorous PSHE quality mark. This will give parents more information about the quality of a school’s PSHE provision and will highlight schools which are already providing opportunities for wider development for their pupils through PSHE. It will make it easier for schools struggling in this area to

---

16 Ofsted, Not yet good enough: personal, social, health and economic education in schools, May 2013, p4-5
17 Ofsted, Not yet good enough: personal, social, health and economic education in schools, p7
18 Ibid., p8
19 House of Commons Education Select Committee, All schools should have to provide PSHE and SRE, p3
20 Department for Education, Government response: Life lessons: PSHE and SRE in schools, p5 work with the best. The new PSHE quality mark will be brought in line with similar accreditations of its type which require schools to provide evidence for the depth and quality of their teaching in a particular area. The new accreditation will drive improvement in the subject, with many schools seeking the award expected to make tangible improvements to their teaching to achieve the quality mark.\textsuperscript{21}
4. Calls for statutory PSHE and earlier Government rejection

4.1 Education Committee report and recommendation for statutory PSHE

In 2014-15, the Commons Education Select Committee conducted an enquiry into PSHE and SRE, including consideration of whether the two subjects should be made statutory. In February 2015 the Committee recommended that age-appropriate PSHE, including SRE, should become a statutory subject in primary and secondary schools. The Committee believed that the then Government’s:

…current strategy for improving PSHE is weak, with a mismatch between the priority that ministers claim they give PSHE and the steps that have been taken to improve the quality of teaching in the subject.

The Government response published in July 2015 did not take forward this recommendation for PSHE to be made statutory, although it stated that it would be giving further consideration to the Committee’s arguments in 2015.

The Chair of the new Education Committee, Neil Carmichael, was critical of the Government’s response:

The response made by the Government today is disappointing. Ministers entirely sidestep the call made by MPs in the closing months of the last Parliament to give statutory status to PSHE. They also reject or brush over nearly every other recommendation made by the previous Education Committee in their key report published five months ago. It is unclear why it should have taken the Government so long to publish such a feeble response.

In November 2015, the Chair of the Committee wrote to the Education Secretary to stress that the Committee expected an update on statutory status, and urging that the arguments in favour of statutory status should be considered carefully.

In December 2015, Natasha Devon, founder of the Self-Esteem Team and mental health champion at the Department for Education, told the Education Committee in oral evidence to its inquiry into the mental health and wellbeing of looked after children that she believed the

---

22 House of Commons Education Select Committee, All schools should have to provide PSHE and SRE, 17 February 2015
23 Ibid.
Education Secretary favoured statutory status, but that there were budgetary issues:

Q50: [...] As far as I am aware—this is just anecdotal—Nicky Morgan is in favour of it being made statutory, so the question is: what more can we do? My hunch is that financial considerations are at the root of the decision not to make it statutory, because as soon as you make it statutory you have to give it a budget.27

Joint letter from select committee Chairs (January 2016)

In January 2016, the Chairs of four Commons select committees – education, health, home affairs and business, innovation and skills – wrote to the Education Secretary, citing committee reports and statements from the Children’s Commissioner and the Chief Medical Officer, in support of statutory PSHE and SRE.

The letter stated that it was “clear to the four of us that there is a need to work towards PSHE and SRE becoming statutory in all schools.”28

4.2 Women and Equalities Committee inquiry and Government response

As part of its inquiry into sexual harassment and sexual violence in schools, the Women and Equalities Committee asked for comments on the strength of the Government’s evidence on the current status of PSHE and its work in this area, to inform its questions to Ministers on 12 July 2016.29

The Committee’s report was published in September 2016. It recommended that that PSHE and SRE should be made statutory subjects as part of the Education Bill then planned for autumn 2016.30 (That Bill was subsequently dropped.)

The Government’s response, published in November 2016, did not include a commitment to make either PSHE or SRE statutory. The Government stated that it would consider improvements to the teaching of both subjects:

…we will look at how what is taught in PSHE and SRE can fit into a whole school approach and reflected in codes of practice. We are conscious that the existing SRE guidance was last updated in 2000 and the case for further action on PSHE and SRE delivery is actively under review, with particular consideration to improving quality and accessibility.31

27 Education Committee, Uncorrected oral evidence: Mental health and well-being of looked after children, HC 481, 16 December 2015
28 Education Committee, Letter from Neil Carmichael MP, Dr Sarah Wollaston MP, Rt Hon Keith Vaz MP, and Iain Wright MP, to Rt Hon Nicky Morgan MP, 8 January 2016
29 Women and Equalities Committee, Personal, Social, Health and Economic education and the curriculum, 5 July 2016
30 Women and Equalities Committee, Sexual harassment and sexual violence in schools, Third Report session 2016-17, HC 91 para 151
31 Women and Equalities Committee, Sexual harassment and sexual violence in schools: Government response to the Committee’s Third Report of Session 2016–17, First special report of 2016-17, para 56
The Committee Chair, Maria Miller, was critical of the response, and in particular the lack of a commitment to statutory SRE:

In particular the Government needs to prioritise action to ensure Sex and Relationship education reflects the realities of the 21st century rather than the pre-smartphone age when guidance was last updated.32

New letter from select committee Chairs (November 2016)

Following the Government’s response to the Women and Equalities Committee report, five select committee Chairs wrote to the Education Secretary, to express disappointment at the lack of an announcement of statutory PSHE, and urged the Government either to support a current Private Member’s Bill for statutory PSHE (see section 3.4) or bring forward proposals of its own.33

The five Chairs were Neil Carmichael (Education Committee), Maria Miller (Women and Equalities), Yvette Cooper (Home Affairs), Dr Sarah Wollaston (Health), and Iain Wright (Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy).

4.3 Government decision not to make PSHE statutory (February 2016)

In February 2016, the then Education Secretary Nicky Morgan wrote to the Education Committee Chair to state that PSHE would not be made statutory:

The vast majority of schools already make provision for PSHE and while the Government agrees that making PSHE statutory would give it equal status with other subjects, the Government is concerned that this would do little to tackle the most pressing problems with the subject, which are to do with the variable quality of its provision, as evidenced by Ofsted’s finding that 40% of PSHE teaching is less than good. As such, while we will continue to keep the status of PSHE in the curriculum under review, our immediate focus will be on improving the quality of PSHE teaching in our schools.34

The letter also stated that the DfE would be working with a group of leading headteachers and practitioners in the following months to produce an action plan and recommendations for improving PSHE, including publishing a comprehensive PSHE toolkit for schools.

Neil Carmichael, the Chair of the Education Committee, was quoted in Schools Week stating that he was “disappointed that the government is not going as far as the committee would like but pleased they are

32 Women and Equalities Committee, New law needed to protect children from sexual harassment and violence, 29 November 2016
33 Education Committee, Letter from Neil Carmichael MP and others to Rt Hon Justine Greening MP, 29 November 2016
34 Education Committee, Letter from Rt Hon Nicky Morgan MP to Neil Carmichael MP, 10 February 2016
working on an action plan with the profession to improve the teaching of PSHE.”\textsuperscript{35}

It was reported in the press that the decision not to make PSHE statutory was taken by the Prime Minister.\textsuperscript{36}

The PSHE Association was strongly critical of the decision, with the Association’s Chief Executive, Joe Hayman, describing it as “an appalling failure,” and stating that:

> What is most baffling about this decision is that the Government has a range of objectives it seeks to achieve through PSHE education, including teaching pupils to stay safe online, promoting children and young people’s mental health and preventing radicalisation, child sexual exploitation and violence against women and girls. Its decision not to address a status quo in which these issues are addressed by untrained teachers in inadequate curriculum time – or left off the curriculum altogether – is self-defeating and leaves vulnerable young people at risk.\textsuperscript{37}

The letter was also discussed in a House of Lords debate on the day of its publication – see \textit{HL Deb 10 Feb 2016 c2233-2236}.

Subsequent Government comment and reconsideration

In September 2016, the newly appointed Education Secretary, Justine Greening, indicated to the Education Committee that she was open to reconsidering the position of PSHE and SRE.\textsuperscript{38}

A subsequent response to a Parliamentary Question by the Education Minister Edward Timpson confirmed:

> As the Secretary of State said at the Education Select Committee hearing in September 2016, we need to look again at how schools deliver high quality PSHE including SRE. We are considering all the options and will come to a view soon.\textsuperscript{39}

During the Second Reading debate in the Commons on the \textit{Children and Social Work Bill [HL]} in December 2016, the Minister indicated that he had asked officials to “accelerate” their work on PSHE and SRE, so that he could report on the Department’s conclusions at a later point during the passage of the Bill.\textsuperscript{40}

4.4 Legislative proposals

Labour Government plans

The \textit{Children’s Plan}, published by the then Department for Children, Schools and Families in December 2007, emphasised the then Labour Government’s view it was important for schools to develop young

\textsuperscript{35} Schools Week, \textit{Government rules out making PSHE and SRE statutory}, 10 February 2016

\textsuperscript{36} Telegraph, David Cameron just blocked compulsory sex education - and the women in his Cabinet are furious, 11 February 2016

\textsuperscript{37} PSHE Association, \textit{Statement on government decision to reject statutory status for PSHE education}, 10 February 2016

\textsuperscript{38} Education Committee, \textit{Role and Responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Education}, 14 September 2016, HC 196

\textsuperscript{39} PQ 47734, 18 October 2016

\textsuperscript{40} HC Deb 5 Dec 2016 c84
people in the round, as well as ensuring that they receive an excellent education. Amongst other things, it announced a review of the delivery of sex and relationships education, and also set out the Government’s commitment to examine the effectiveness of drugs education. Subsequently a Drugs and Alcohol Advisory Group was commissioned to carry out a review and to make its recommendations to the Secretary of State. Both these reviews recommended that good PSHE was vital to providing a healthy, rounded education.41

On 23 October 2008, Jim Knight, the then Schools Minister announced in a Written Ministerial Statement that the Government had decided that PSHE should have statutory status.42 The Minister asked Sir Alasdair Macdonald to report to the Secretary of State on a practicable way forward. Sir Alasdair reported to the Secretary of State in March 2009: Independent Review of the proposal to make Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education (PSHE) statutory.

In a Written Ministerial Statement on 5 November 2009 the then Secretary of State, Ed Balls, announced his decision to proceed with legislation to make PSHE education part of the statutory National Curriculum in both primary and secondary education, and that parents’ right to withdraw their children from sex and relationship education (SRE) should continue but only until their children reach the age of 15, so that every young person would receive at least one year of SRE before the end of compulsory education.43

Measures to legislate for these proposals were included in the Children, Schools and Families Bill before Parliament shortly before the 2010 General Election. For background see Library research paper 09/95 on the Children, Schools and Families Bill, Session 2009-10 (pages 23-27).

Many of the Bill’s provisions, including the introduction of compulsory PSHE education and the provision that all children receive at least one year of sex and relationship education were removed during the consideration of Lords Amendments on 8 April 2010 immediately before the dissolution of Parliament for the General Election.

The provisions in the Bill that did survive are now contained in the Children, Schools and Families Act 2010.

Labour commitment to statutory PSHE (2016)

In March 2016, the then Shadow Education Secretary, Lucy Powell, announced that making PSHE statutory in all state schools would be “one of the first things Labour does in government” and stated that:

Improving [PSHE’s] status would help reverse the downward trend in lesson quality. It would ensure there was a broad and balanced framework of standards, with up-to-date guidance that reflects the world we live in. Alongside this, we want a new generation of PSHE leaders in every school, sharing best practice."44

---

41 DCSF Press Release, All pupils to get healthy lifestyle lessons, 23 October 2008
42 HC Deb 23 Oct 2008 c15-17WS
43 HC Deb 5 Nov 2009 c49-52WS
44 Times, Labour will ensure children are taught the dangers of sexting, 22 March 2016
Recent Private Members’ Bills

In July 2016, Caroline Lucas presented the Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education (Statutory Requirement) Bill 2016-17, in favour of statutory PSHE including SRE and education on ending violence against women and girls; and to provide for initial and continuing teacher education and guidance on best practice for delivering and inspecting PSHE and SRE education. The Bill is scheduled to have its Second Reading debate in January 2017.

Caroline Lucas also presented bills in favour of compulsory PSHE during both the 2014-15 and 2015-16 parliamentary sessions, neither of which received a second reading.

Teresa Pearce, who was sixth in the 2015 Private Members’ Bill Ballot, presented the Compulsory Emergency First Aid Education (State-funded Secondary Schools) Bill 2015-16 in June 2015. First Aid is a topic that is currently often taught within PSHE. The Bill had its Second Reading on 20 November 2015. The debate was not concluded and the Bill did not advance further.

Amendment to Psychoactive Substances Bill

An amendment was tabled by Labour during the Committee Stage of the Psychoactive Substances Bill [HL] in the House of Commons in October 2015 to make PSHE a foundation subject in the National Curriculum in England. In keeping with the Bill, the amendment included particular requirements relating to drugs education.

Lyn Brown spoke to the amendment, and also the New Clause, for Labour. She was critical of PSHE provision in England, citing the Ofsted report published in 2013:

Ofsted…found that in 60% of schools PSHE training was not good enough and certainly needed to improve, and the evidence from the Government’s own inspectors suggests that the Government’s approach to PSHE just is not working. And all this is happening while the presence of NPS [new psychoactive substances] has begun to grow in our communities.

Lyn Brown criticised a lack of “comprehensive drug education” in England, arguing that a better approach was taken in Wales, where education was “at the forefront” of drugs prevention policy. Lyn Brown supported statutory PSHE as “an important tool in our fight against psychoactive drugs and those who push them,” and said that the amendment for progress on education to be included in the review of the Act “would focus minds in the Home Office and compel it to put in place the most effective and comprehensive awareness campaign possible.”

---

45 Parliament, Private Members’ Bill Ballot, 4 June 2015
46 HC Deb 20 Nov 2015 c937-961 and c984-1019
47 New Clause 4 – list of amendments 27 October 2015
48 Ofsted, Not yet good enough: personal, social, health and economic education in schools, May 2013
49 PBC 29 Oct 2015 c76
50 PBC 29 Oct 2015 c76
51 PBC 29 Oct 2015 c79
52 PBC 29 Oct 2015 c81
Speaking for the Government, Mike Penning stated that the Department for Education would be writing to the Education Committee by the end of the year on the status of PSHE.\textsuperscript{53}

Lyn Brown returned to these issues at Report Stage in the Commons, and tabled a further amendment (New Clause 1) for statutory PSHE. The New Clause was defeated by 307 votes to 241.\textsuperscript{54}

The Bill has since received Royal Assent as the \textit{Psychoactive Substances Act 2016}.\textsuperscript{55}

\section*{4.5 Support for statutory PSHE}

The PSHE Expert Group established by the Coalition Government (see page 6) recommended that PSHE be made statutory:

\begin{quote}
\ldots as a means of ensuring that the subject is always delivered by trained and supported teachers, with adequate curriculum time. It is our view that the great potential of the subject is not being realised, and that system change is needed.\textsuperscript{55}
\end{quote}

The PSHE Association is conducting a \textbf{campaign} in support of statutory status for PSHE. The campaign lists a wide range of supporters, including the NUT, Royal College of Nursing, and British Red Cross.\textsuperscript{56}

In October 2015, the PSHE Association published a \textbf{paper} making the case for statutory status, which stated that “statutory status for PSHE education is supported by 92\% of pupils, 90\% of parents, 88\% of teachers and 85\% of business leaders."\textsuperscript{57} The paper argued that non-statutory status was the root of the problems facing PSHE:

\begin{quote}
As a non-statutory, non-examined subject, PSHE education is not held to the same standards of rigour as other subjects and PSHE teachers are not given the curriculum time or training they need to deliver to the standards we should expect.\textsuperscript{58}
\end{quote}

The Sex Education Forum is also \textbf{campaigning} for an entitlement to statutory PSHE, focused on SRE.

The Children’s Commissioner for England, Anne Longfield, was quoted in a recent press article on sexual offences in UK schools as supporting statutory PSHE to help children “understand what is inappropriate or illegal behaviour.”\textsuperscript{59}

Another recent \textbf{report} in the \textit{Telegraph}, on child sexual abuse, noted the support of the NSPCC and Barnardo’s for statutory PSHE.\textsuperscript{60}

\begin{footnotes}
\item 53 PBC 29 Oct 2015 c84
\item 54 Debate at \textit{HC Deb 20 Jan 2016 c1437-1481}
\item 55 Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education Expert Group, \textit{Report and Recommendations}, p4
\item 56 PSHE Association, \textit{Pledge your support for statutory PSHE education} [accessed 14 September 2015]
\item 57 PSHE Association, \textit{Personal, Social, Health and Economic (PSHE) education – a curriculum for life: The case for statutory status}, October 2015, p3
\item 58 Ibid.
\item 59 BBC News, \textit{School sex crime reports in UK top 5,500 in three years}, 6 September 2015
\item 60 Telegraph, \textit{Lessons to prevent sexual abuse should be mandatory, experts demand}, 3 September 2015
\end{footnotes}
4.6 Opposition to statutory status

During the First Reading debate of the Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education (Statutory Requirement) Bill 2015-16, (see section 3.1), Philip Davies argued against the Bill and the principle of PSHE being made statutory:

I oppose the Bill in principle. Parents who do not want their children to have the values of their teacher inflicted on them when they may be against the values of those parents should be supported by this Parliament in being able to remove their children from such lessons if they see fit. Parental responsibility, parental choice and the freedom of parents to allow children to be brought up with their values should be protected in this House, not just trampled over because we happen to have different individual opinions.61

Opposition to statutory PSHE often focuses on the issue of parental responsibility and whether it is appropriate for the type of issues covered in PSHE to be taught by teachers rather than parents. In written evidence to the Education Committee, the Family Education Trust stated that “most of the components of PSHE are the primary responsibility of parents” and that:

The more that schools take to themselves responsibility for these areas, the less parents will be inclined to view them as their responsibility. If PSHE were to become a statutory part of the curriculum alongside other curriculum subjects, there would be a very real danger that, over the course of time, parents would no more consider themselves responsible for these aspects of their children’s physical, emotional and social development than they typically regard themselves as responsible for the teaching of English, maths, history and science.62

Evidence to the Committee from the Evangelical Alliance raised similar issues, emphasising the role of parents in teaching the topics covered in PSHE, with particular reference to the sensitivity of SRE.63

---

61 HC Deb 15 Jul 2015 c931
62 Family Education Trust, Further Written Evidence to the Education Committee, November 2014
63 Evangelical Alliance, Written Evidence to the Education Committee, July 2014
About the Library

The House of Commons Library research service provides MPs and their staff with the impartial briefing and evidence base they need to do their work in scrutinising Government, proposing legislation, and supporting constituents.

As well as providing MPs with a confidential service we publish open briefing papers, which are available on the Parliament website.

Every effort is made to ensure that the information contained in these publically available research briefings is correct at the time of publication. Readers should be aware however that briefings are not necessarily updated or otherwise amended to reflect subsequent changes.

If you have any comments on our briefings please email papers@parliament.uk. Authors are available to discuss the content of this briefing only with Members and their staff.

If you have any general questions about the work of the House of Commons you can email hcinfo@parliament.uk.

Disclaimer

This information is provided to Members of Parliament in support of their parliamentary duties. It is a general briefing only and should not be relied on as a substitute for specific advice. The House of Commons or the author(s) shall not be liable for any errors or omissions, or for any loss or damage of any kind arising from its use, and may remove, vary or amend any information at any time without prior notice.

The House of Commons accepts no responsibility for any references or links to, or the content of, information maintained by third parties. This information is provided subject to the conditions of the Open Parliament Licence.