The specified period

2. The specified period is the period of 31 days beginning with 1 October 2020.

Reasons for issuing the notice

3.—(1) The Welsh Ministers consider that the issuing of this notice is an appropriate and proportionate action in all the circumstances relating to the incidence or transmission of coronavirus for the following reasons.

(2) Maintained schools, maintained nursery schools and other funded nursery education providers will continue to face additional burdens, during the autumn term and beyond, which will limit their ability to perform their duties fully.

- The schools and providers will continue to need to support children in re-integrating into the school or setting. Many children may be unready or unmotivated to learn and the schools and providers will continue to need flexibility in order to be able to invest time in developing their readiness to learn.

- The schools and providers may need to adapt their teaching and learning to ensure that the key concepts that would have been taught, and the key issues that would have been covered, during the summer term are reinforced alongside the introduction of new teaching and learning. They will continue to need the flexibility to be able to prioritise the reinforcement of that key learning (drawing on the support provided by the Welsh Government’s ‘Recruit, Recover and Raise Standards’ plan<sup>(1)</sup> where appropriate).
- The schools and providers will need to continue to respond to an increase in children’s well-being needs. The time spent away from the school or setting is likely to have had a negative impact on the well-being of some children and the feedback received from schools and providers indicates that they expect to face significant well-being challenges in the autumn term. Although such challenges are often encountered at the beginning of a new term, the disruption caused by coronavirus is likely to make the situation significantly worse. The schools and providers will need the flexibility to be able to invest time in supporting children’s well-being, as well as responding to a range of well-being needs which will place additional demands on their time.
- The schools and providers will need to be given an opportunity to develop robust and coherent school-level and nursery-level plans to ensure that teaching and learning can continue in all operational scenarios, including the partial or full closure of those settings for certain periods. They may need to transition quickly from one operational scenario to another, whilst ensuring that the full range of learning continues to take place. Guidance has been issued by the Welsh Government<sup>(2)</sup> and at regional level to help schools and providers to ensure that teaching and learning can continue safely and that children’s learning and progression is given priority in all operational scenarios.

(3) Maintained schools, maintained nursery schools and other funded nursery education providers will also continue to face a number of logistical challenges which will place increased administrative and logistical burdens upon them, even when operating fully on site.

- The schools and providers will need to place children into contact groups and minimise the interaction between children in different contact groups. This will limit, to a significant extent, their ability to mix staff and children. It may also require schools and providers to think differently, and to take different approaches, in order to secure learning, and reflecting the priorities set out in Welsh Government guidance<sup>(1)</sup>. It may also limit their ability to allow children to move to different parts of the school or nursery site in order to access the full breadth of the curriculum (e.g. for science, physical education, music or drama).
- The schools and providers will need to estimate and manage risk in planning their operations. Welsh Government guidance<sup>(2)</sup> recommends that schools and providers should consider the full range of interactions and activities that ordinarily occur in school or nursery life in order to minimise the risk of coronavirus transmission. The schools and providers will need time and flexibility in order to be able to devise and test their plans: these will need to make provision for all children to be on site, whereas before the autumn term no more than a third of their pupils will have been on site at any one time. The schools and providers will also need to monitor and re-evaluate their plans over time, taking account of any further changes to their operations. These demands will go well beyond their normal administrative burdens.
- The schools and providers will need to manage the implications of the Welsh Government’s “Test Trace Protect” strategy<sup>(3)</sup>. This strategy may require a child’s contact group to self-isolate if the child tests positive for coronavirus. In relation to secondary schools, Welsh Government guidance<sup>(4)</sup> states that the child’s contact group may include the child’s entire year group and anyone who has shared transport with that child. Staff members may also need to self-isolate if they have been in close contact with the child. These matters mean that there may be prolonged periods during which members of staff and groups of children will be absent. This will cause disruption and will have a clear impact on the schools' and providers' ability to perform their duties fully.

(4) For these reasons, the application of the duties described in paragraph 1, in their unmodified form, would place unrealistic demands on maintained schools, maintained nursery schools and other funded nursery education providers; would harm their ability to respond flexibly and effectively to the challenges arising as a result of coronavirus and its effects; and would be likely to have a detrimental impact on children.
