1. Summary of findings

The findings in this report give a picture of the teachers who took part in the Skills for Life training programmes for literacy, numeracy and ESOL teachers from 2001 to 2003.

The data is not based on representative samples of the whole population of teachers, but on the substantial numbers of teachers who participated in the training. These numbers are sufficiently large to make the findings interesting. The data will be useful to those responsible for planning professional development programmes for staff.

Key findings:

- More than 80 per cent of literacy, numeracy and ESOL teachers are female.
- More than half of literacy and numeracy teachers are aged over 46.
- 75 per cent of ESOL teachers, and over 90 per cent of literacy and numeracy teachers are white.
- 79 per cent of teachers have a qualification at level 4 or above, 90 per cent at level three and above.
- 56 per cent have recognised teaching qualifications, such as Cert Ed/PGCE but many have other specialist professional teaching qualifications.
- 7 per cent have only an introductory teaching certificate in the form of the C&G 9281, and no other teaching qualifications.
- 5 per cent have no teaching qualifications at all.

2. Introduction

The aim of the research is to provide some information on the backgrounds of adult literacy, numeracy and ESOL teachers, in terms of both experience and qualifications. The Skills for Life strategy for improving adult literacy and numeracy skills included the introduction of new standards and curricula. During the period 2001-2003, existing teachers of adult literacy, numeracy and ESOL were encouraged to participate in two- and three-day professional development programmes aimed at facilitating the introduction of the new curricula into practice.

In addition to the programmes for the adult literacy, numeracy and ESOL curricula, two further programmes were offered: one provided training in the use of the new Pre-Entry Curriculum Framework (PECF) for those working with learners below level 1 in the national standards; the other introduced the Access for All document – which underpins the curricula for learners with learning difficulties and disabilities.

The programmes of training were delivered separately – literacy and numeracy by the Basic Skills Agency (BSA), and ESOL by a consortium led by the LLU+, London South Bank University and the Basic Skills for Inclusive Learning Programmes (BASIL) by NIACE.

The analysis included in this report draws on all five programmes:

- Literacy core curriculum training
- Numeracy core curriculum training
- ESOL core curriculum training
- Pre-Entry Curriculum Framework (PECF) training – BASIL Strand A
- Access for All training – BASIL Strand B

The training programmes on PECF and Access for All were both delivered as part of the Basic Skills for Inclusive Learning programme (BASIL), with the Pre-Entry Curriculum framework known as 'BASIL Strand A', and Access for All as 'BASIL Strand B'.

3. Sources of data

The data upon which this report is based comes from application forms and questionnaires completed by teachers and trainers who attended the core curriculum training courses provided as part of the Skills for Life strategy. This document uses the term 'teachers' as inclusive of all participants in the core curriculum training programmes, though they may describe themselves as either teachers or trainers. It includes data from all five programmes: literacy, numeracy and ESOL core curriculum training, and both strands of the BASIL programme, PECF (strand A) and Access for All (strand B).

The data was provided by the organisations which delivered the training. The literacy and numeracy data was provided by BSA. The ESOL and BASIL data was provided by NIACE and the National Association of Teaching English and Community Languages to Adults (NATECLA). The ESOL core curriculum training was delivered by a consortium led by LLLU, including BSA, NIACE and NATECLA. The ESOL phase 1 data was provided by NATECLA, the phase 2 data by NIACE.

The delivery of the first adult literacy and numeracy core curriculum training programmes commenced in March 2001. The data from the literacy and numeracy training was collected by questionnaires usually at the time of the training, but in some early programmes they were sent by mail post-course. Although literacy and numeracy were delivered as separate programmes, the data was collected without differentiating between the two. Thus this report is unable to differentiate between the characteristics of literacy and numeracy teachers – they are included here as a single group. Entry to both the ESOL and BASIL programmes was administered by NIACE. In these programmes the data was given by participants through the programme entry application forms. Copies of the ESOL and BASIL application forms and the questionnaire used for literacy and numeracy participants can be found in Appendix 1

Literacy and numeracy were separate core curriculum programmes, but the BSA 'participant questionnaire' (see Appendix 1) did not differentiate between the two. A random sample of 1,004 was analysed from a total of approximately 15,000 questionnaires. Due to the varying methods of data collection, the 15,000 from which the sample was taken would include most but not all participants.

For the ESOL core curriculum training, it has been possible to include the application forms for all participants in phases 1 and 2. This is a total of 5,073 ESOL teachers: 2,552 in phase 1 and a further 2,521 in phase 2. It has been necessary to draw separate conclusions for the two phases because the two application forms differ. Fuller comparisons have been possible from the ESOL phase 2 data.

For the BASIL A, PECF the application forms for all 1,417 participants of programmes were analysed. These were all existing teachers working with adults with learning difficulties at levels below entry level on the QCA National Standards for adult literacy and numeracy. Among these teachers, 45 per cent had also attended one or other of the three main curriculum training programmes in literacy, numeracy or ESOL. This was mostly literacy or numeracy, with only 3.4 per cent reporting participants in ESOL core curriculum training.

The analysis of the BASIL B 'Access for All' training participants is drawn from the full set of 1,268 application forms. However, this group differs, as completion of one or other of the literacy, numeracy and ESOL core curriculum training programmes was a prerequisite to entry for this programme. The data confirms that 96 per cent of the participants had participated in at least one other core curriculum training programme. The BASIL B data gives a picture only of those who attended the training. These same individuals are likely also to be represented through their participation in the other programmes. Organisations selected a representative to attend the Access for All training on their behalf, creating a tendency for more experienced participants. Where this document makes tentative conclusions about all teachers, the BASIL B data has been excluded to avoid double counting.

Notes: The data here for distribution of literacy and numeracy has limited reliability as it is based only on the sample. ESOL phase 2 and BASIL are based on all participants. The percentages may not be exact due to rounding.

4. Limitations of the study

This study describes the features of the population of teachers who attended the training programmes. It is therefore limited in terms of providing information about the whole population of teachers of literacy, numeracy and ESOL for several reasons:

- The participants in each of the core curriculum training programmes cannot be assumed to be a representative sample of the whole teaching body. The training was originally not available to people teaching less than six hours a week and different training programmes do not appear to have operated this exclusion principle with the same level of rigour. There are questions about the equal accessibility and availability of the programmes in different regions of the country and the marketing of the programmes may have had different levels of effectiveness with staff working in different contexts, for example, in the community and voluntary sectors.

Nonetheless, the overall size of the sample means that the data gathered, while it is not based on a random sample of teachers, is sufficiently large for the analysis to be valuable. A total of 8,762 application forms and questionnaires were analysed for this report, comprising:

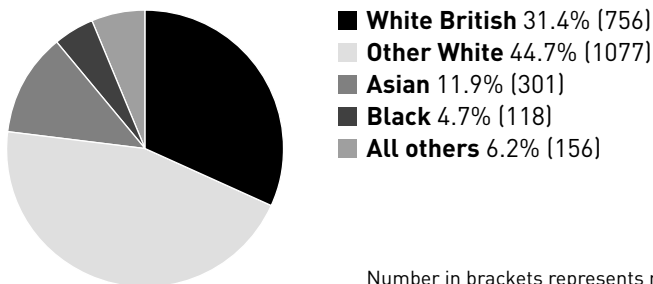

- Literacy and numeracy: 1,004 (random sample from total of 15,000)
 - ESOL: 5,073 (all participants phase 1: 2,552; phase 2: 2,521)
 - BASIL A (PECF): all participants 1,417
 - BASIL B (Access for All): all participants 1,268
- The questionnaires given to the participants, though similar in content terms, are not identical. This creates limitations on the extent to which the findings for different groups can be compared. For example, the enrolment forms for the ESOL and BASIL programmes, which did not require participants to record their age, the differing categories were used to indicate ethnicity.
 - The manner in which the data was collected varied. Some programmes collected the data from an enrolment form completed by all participants before the course. Others collected it by questionnaire completed at the training event, or in some cases sent by post. These differences make comparing the data across the programmes more difficult.

5. Teachers of literacy, numeracy and ESOL: ethnicity, gender and age

5.1 Ethnicity of teachers

Teachers of ESOL, literacy and numeracy are predominantly white and female. In ESOL phase 2, 31.4 per cent of ESOL participants described themselves as 'White British' and 44.7 per cent described themselves as 'Other White'.

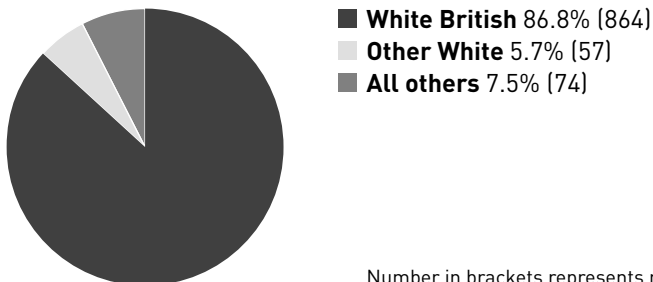

2 Ethnicity: ESOL Phase 2

Number in brackets represents number of respondents

Of literacy and numeracy teachers attending the training, 86.8 per cent described themselves as 'White British' and 5.7 per cent as 'Other White'.

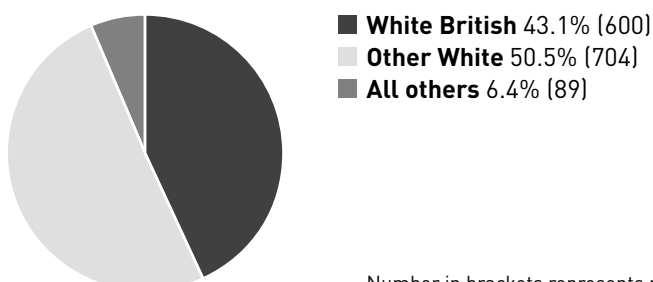

3 Ethnicity: Literacy and Numeracy

Number in brackets represents number of respondents

In BASIL A, 43.1 per cent of the participants described themselves as 'White British' with a further 50.5 per cent describing themselves as 'Other White'. The differential pattern here of the balance of 'White British' to 'Other White' may well be due to the layout of the questionnaires - in all cases the predominant group is the first available tick box on the form for 'White'.

4 Ethnicity: BASIL 'A'

Number in brackets represents number of respondents

In BASIL B, the figures were 42.3 per cent and 49.9 per cent respectively.

5 Ethnicity: BASIL 'B'

- White British 42.3% (522)
- Other White 49.9% (615)
- All others 7.8% (96)

Number in brackets represents number of respondents

The regional distribution of ethnicity shows lower numbers of white teachers in London and West Midlands, with correspondingly higher numbers of teachers from other ethnic groups.

5.2 Distribution of white ESOL teachers by region

6 Distribution of White teachers by region - ESOL 2

- A - East of England 89.9% (120)
- B - East Midlands 88.2% (119)
- C - London 67.3% (596)
- D - North East 78.7% (96)
- E - North West 80.7% (179)
- F - South East 89.2% (278)
- G - South West 88.3% (106)
- H - West Midlands 65.8% (185)
- I - Yorkshire & Humberside 80.2% (144)

Number in brackets represents number of respondents

7 Distribution of White teachers by region - Literacy and numeracy

- A - East of England 98.3% (118)
- B - East Midlands 97.4% (113)
- C - London 72% (90)
- D - North East 97.8% (44)
- E - North West 96.4% (80)
- F - South East 97.8% (86)
- G - South West 97.7% (82)
- H - West Midlands 89.9% (169)
- I - Yorkshire & Humberside 97.5% (116)

Number in brackets represents number of respondents

8 Distribution of White teachers by region - BASIL A (PECF)

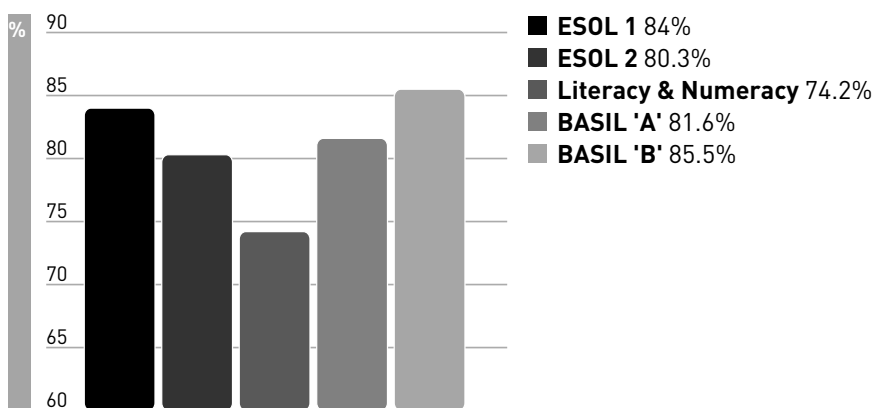

Overall, 75 per cent of ESOL teachers are white and over 90 per cent of teachers of literacy, numeracy and LLDD are white. The largest group to describe itself as 'White British' is the group of literacy and numeracy teachers, while less than half of the white teachers in ESOL and in each of the BASIL strands describe themselves as such.

5.3 Gender of teachers

Teachers of language, literacy and numeracy are predominantly female. In ESOL phase 1, 84 per cent of participants were female; and in phase 2, 80.3 per cent. For literacy and numeracy the figure was 74.2 per cent and for BASIL the figures were 81.6 per cent and 85.5 per cent for strands A and B respectively.

9 Percentage of women participants

5.4 Age ranges of teachers

A high number of literacy and numeracy teachers are over the age of 40. Data on age is not available for the ESOL and BASIL training programme, but some inferences can very tentatively be drawn from the literacy and numeracy data. In the literacy and numeracy training, 51.4 per cent respondents were over the age of 46. A further 31.3 per cent were in the 36–45 age range, while 15.8 per cent of participants were aged between 25 and 35, with a very small number (1.5 per cent) in the 18–24 age range.

10 Literacy and Numeracy Age Range

6. Teachers of literacy, numeracy and ESOL: workplaces and experience

All programmes involved in this study collected information on the workplaces of participants. This data shows clearly how many teachers from different organisations and sectors have participated but cannot be taken to reflect the distribution of teachers in the wider workplace. A number of factors would have influenced the representation of different sectors in the training. As mentioned before (see the earlier section entitled 'Limitations of study'), marketing factors alone would ensure a greater representation of teachers working in colleges than in smaller organisations, for example. Voluntary and small private training organisations would have been less able to release teachers for the training, and may also be employing a number of staff each working too few hours to qualify.

There are also questions regarding how well informed managers were about the relevance and value of the training, and how much importance would have been given to it by some teachers working in relatively isolated environments. Many sessional tutors working in prisons and hospitals, for example, would also either not have been informed or not have been given the support of their workplaces to attend due to the peripatetic nature of their work.

6.1 Organisation and sector

In ESOL phase 1, about two-thirds (66.4 per cent) of the attendees came from colleges as opposed to 1.3 per cent from voluntary organisations. Refugee organisations were similarly under-represented, with only 0.5 per cent of attendees in phase 1 coming from this sector. Phase 2, however, shows an increase in attendance from smaller organisations, following more focused marketing by the National ESOL Project in response to the analysis of phase 1 participants, and more consistent dissemination of information regarding the training and/or discussion among colleagues. Phase 2 had a 44.7 per cent attendance from teachers working in colleges, an increased attendance from the LEA/ACL sector (42.8 as opposed to 22.9 in phase 1), an increased representation from prisons (4.6 per cent as opposed to 2 per cent in phase 1), and 4.2 per cent from voluntary organisations. There was also a marked increase in attendance from refugee organisations to 8.2 per cent .

A similarly high proportion of attendees from colleges characterised the literacy and numeracy training (56.8 per cent), BASIL A (52.4 per cent) and BASIL B (51.3 per cent). The highest proportion of attendees from prisons was recorded at the literacy and numeracy training (8.6 per cent), and private organisations were also most highly represented at this training (14.2 per cent).

No. of cases (or observations)	2,552	2,521	989	1,416	1,191

Notes: The percentages may not be exact due to rounding

6.2 Teachers working in more than one sector

The majority of teachers attending the training worked in only one sector: 77.9 per cent on the ESOL training, 91.7 per cent on the literacy and numeracy, 88.6 per cent on BASIL strand A, and 88 per cent on BASIL strand B. A significant number worked in more than one sector: 22.1 per cent on the ESOL training, 8.3 per cent on the literacy and numeracy, and 11.4 per cent and 12.0 per cent in BASIL strands A and B. A few, particularly in ESOL, reported being employed in three or more sectors.

6.3 Employment status

A significant number of teachers attending the training were in hourly paid employment. For the ESOL training, the figure was just over half (50.3 per cent), for the literacy and numeracy training it was 42.5 per cent, for BASIL A it was 26.9 per cent, and for BASIL B it was 22.5 per cent. ESOL staff (and to a lesser extent literacy and numeracy staff) are more likely to be hourly paid, against the average basic skills staff of 36.6 per cent. The remainder of the sample included teachers in full-time employment (30.9 per cent ESOL, 46.5 per cent literacy and numeracy, 39 per cent and 42.1 per cent BASIL A and B respectively), and those salaried staff on fractional contracts (18.8 per cent ESOL, 11 per cent literacy and numeracy, 15.3 per cent and 20.2 per cent BASIL A and B respectively). Many of the organisations in which teachers of ESOL, literacy and numeracy are employed have a high number of staff on fractional contracts or agency contracts, and this is reflected somewhat in the data.

7. Teachers of literacy, numeracy and ESOL: qualifications

Teachers of ESOL, literacy and numeracy hold a range of qualifications and combinations of qualifications at different levels which reflect what has, until recently, been a hybrid area. Teachers have entered the profession through a variety of routes with little or no clear progression and CPD activity.

The data offers a picture of a number of aspects of the teachers' qualifications:

- highest level of general qualifications
- range of professional teaching qualifications
- highest levels of qualifications in English and maths (literacy and numeracy sample only)

7.1 Highest qualification levels

More than three-quarters (79 per cent) of literacy, numeracy and ESOL teachers hold a level 4 qualification or above – that is a degree or equivalent or a postgraduate qualification – with the figure rising to around 90 per cent when all those with qualifications at level 3 or above are included. Within this, ESOL teachers have slightly higher levels of qualifications, with more at levels 3 and 4, and fewer at level 2 or below, than the cohort of literacy and numeracy teachers. The teachers on the PECF training had slightly lower levels than the other groups.

12 Practicing teachers with qualifications at level 4 or above

13 Practicing teachers with qualifications at level 3 or above

The remaining numbers of participating teachers hold qualifications at NQF level 2 or below.

14 Practicing teachers with qualifications at level 2 or above

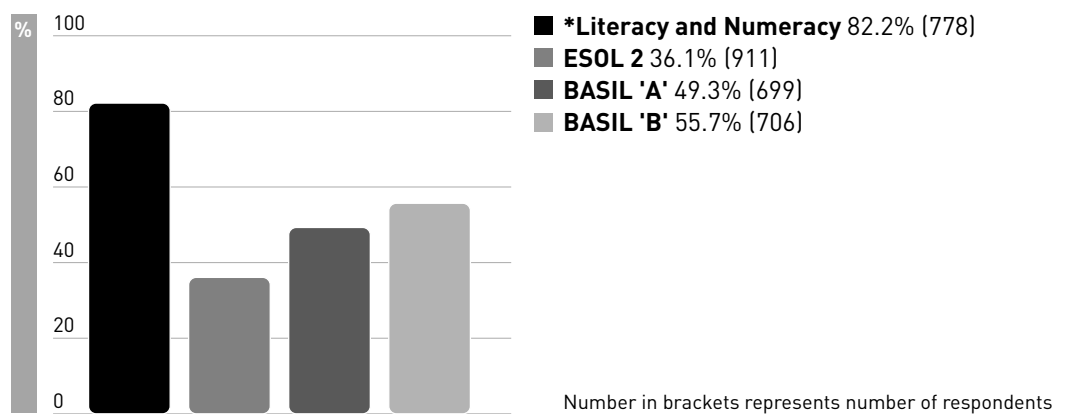

7.2 Professional teaching qualifications

The range of professional teaching qualifications varies from those with fully qualified, recognised teaching status, to those with only an introductory teaching qualification such as the City and Guilds Initial Certificate in Teaching Basic Skills (C&G 9281).

The relatively low number of ESOL teachers holding a PGCE or equivalent is further explored in the section on generic and specialist teaching qualifications below.

Most teachers hold a teaching qualification of some kind (see the figures below), although a minority of teachers have no professional teaching qualifications at all. A further group of teachers have only the Initial Certificate in Teaching Basic Skills (City & Guilds 9281); this qualification was designed only to accredit volunteers.

15 Teachers with a PGCE, Cert Ed or BEd

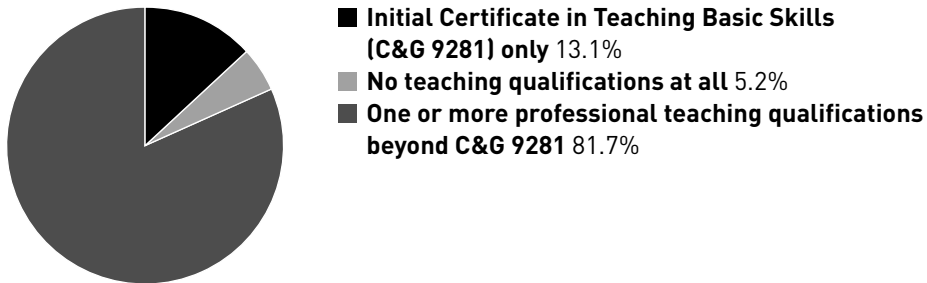

*This figure may include some with teaching certificates that are not DfES-recognised as the questionnaire asked only for confirmation of whether a teaching certificate was held – so this may have been interpreted in different ways by participants.

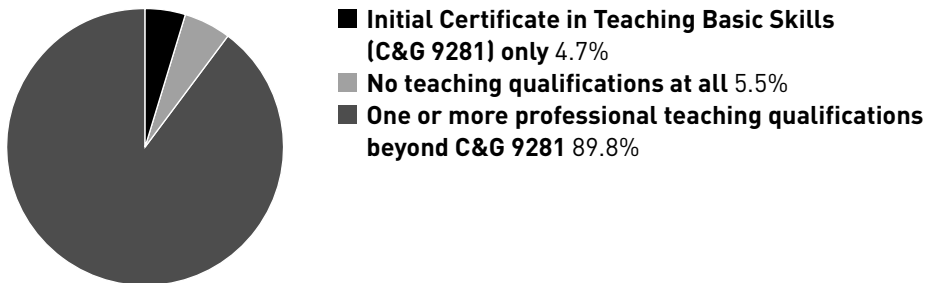

16 Teachers holding at least one professional teaching qualification

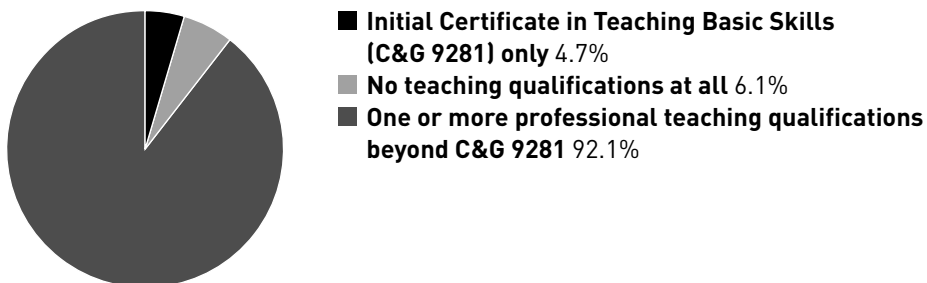

17 Literacy and Numeracy teachers - teaching qualifications

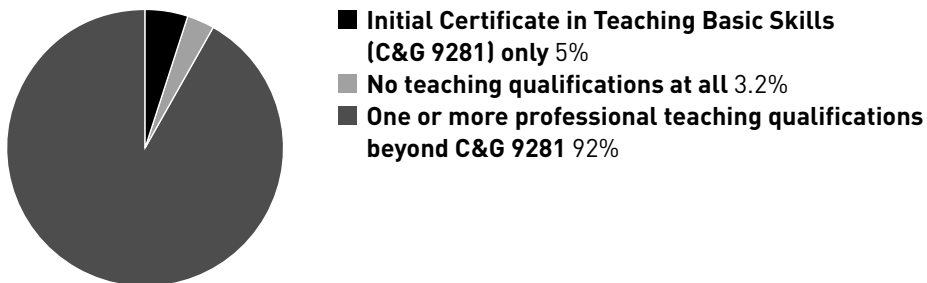

18 ESOL teachers - teaching qualifications

19 BASIL 'A' (Pre-entry) teachers - teaching qualifications

20 BASIL 'B' (Access for All) teachers - teaching qualifications

7.3 ESOL teachers – generic and specialist qualifications

Many teachers of ESOL have trained through the medium of subject specialist professional teaching qualifications. These qualifications were developed specifically for training English language teachers, and have been focused on the international language teacher market and have not been linked to PGCE or Cert Ed status. Consequently among ESOL teachers there are fewer individuals with a PGCE or Cert Ed, although many have qualifications in teaching ESOL at NQF levels 4 and 5.

7.4 Highest levels of qualifications in English and maths

The participant questionnaire for literacy and numeracy asked respondents to state their highest level of qualifications in both English and maths. This question was not asked by the ESOL and BASIL programmes.

More than half (55 per cent) of literacy and numeracy teachers have a qualification in English language at level 3 (A-level equivalent) or above. For mathematics, the figure is 21 per cent at level 3 or above. The majority (91 per cent) of the literacy and numeracy teachers have a qualification in English at level 2 (GCSE equivalent) or above, while 73 per cent are at level 2 or above in maths. Only 6 per cent of teachers have qualifications in English below level 2, and 19 per cent in maths at this level.

8. Further work planned

The NRDC has a major longitudinal study of Skills for Life teachers underway. The data emerging from this study will give a far more detailed picture of the characteristics of the teachers, and how the cohort changes over time.

For emerging details from the NRDC study of teachers, see www.nrdc.org.uk for initial findings in 2004.
