Key findings

During the summer 2011 examination series, over 5.8 million GCSE and over 2.5 million GCE AS and A level awards were made in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. Some 15.1 million GCSE and GCE scripts were marked by the awarding organisations.

If an examination centre is concerned about a candidate's grade, it can ask the awarding organisation to investigate the grade through the enquiries about results process. Following the release of results for the summer 2011 examination series there were 204,600 enquiries about results. For GCE, there were a total of 12,250 subject grade changes following enquiries and for GCSE a total of 26,270.

If a centre still believes a result to be inaccurate after an enquiry, it can appeal to the awarding organisation. Two post-results stages are available for appeals:

Stage 1: review by senior member of the awarding organisation

Following the summer 2011 examination series there were 401 stage 1 appeals made against results. This compares with 333 in 2010 and represents an increase of 20 per cent.

Of the 401 stage 1 appeals, 71 were upheld by the awarding organisations.

Stage 2: appeals panel

A centre may progress an appeal to stage 2 if it still believes a result to be inaccurate after a stage 1 appeal. Of the stage 1 appeals following the summer 2011 examination series, 40 went to a stage 2 appeal. This compares with 29 in 2010 and represents an increase of 38 per cent, but is consistent with the 41 stage 2 appeals received in 2009.

There were 12 stage 2 appeals that were not completed within the target timeline of 50 days from initial receipt.

Forty-eight of the 401 appeals made resulted in changes to candidate grades. This compares with 24 in 2010.

The number of appeals received and those resulting in grade changes have increased from 2010. But when looking at the last five years, there has been a downward trend in the number of appeals received. The number of successful appeals resulting in grade changes has remained fairly consistent.

Introduction

This statistical bulletin, published by the regulators in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, presents data on appeals made to awarding organisations for the summer 2011 GCSE and GCE examination series. The report summarises the performance of the six awarding organisations in England, Wales and Northern Ireland:

- Assessment and Qualifications Alliance (AQA)
- Council for the Curriculum Examinations and Assessment (Northern Ireland) (CCEA)
- Edexcel
- International Curriculum & Assessment Agency (Examinations) ICAAE
- Oxford Cambridge and RSA Examinations (OCR) and
- WJEC.

The awarding organisations provide the regulators – in England the Office of Qualifications and Examinations Regulation (Ofqual), in Wales the Welsh Government, and in Northern Ireland the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) – with statistical data on appeals against results.

The report:

- Details the processes and 2011 reporting arrangements for appeals against results
- Gives data for the six awarding organisations in terms of the two stages for appeals
- Gives data on the number of appeals received, the number resulting in subject grade changes and the performance of awarding organisations in meeting agreed timelines.

Once published, data may be revised in subsequent bulletins due to late-received data or if an error is identified. In this bulletin some historical figures have been revised since last year's report.

The post-results appeals process

Enquiries about results

Every year, the GCSE and GCE awarding organisations publish information and guidance for centres on making use of the post-results services following examinations and the issue of results.

Awarding organisations issue the results of summer examinations in August. If an examination centre (usually a school or college) is concerned about a candidate's grade, it can make an enquiry about the result to the awarding organisation, which will then review the accuracy of the grade. Candidates cannot make an enquiry about a result directly; they must ask through their centre. This is because centres have responsibility for entering candidates for examinations. Private candidates are an exception; they can ask the awarding organisations directly.

If the review of the result shows that marking or processing errors have been made and the candidate's grade is incorrect, the awarding organisation will change the result to the appropriate grade. Since 2001, grades have been reduced as well as increased, where appropriate.

A report called Enquiries About Results for GCSE and GCE: Summer 2011 Examination Series was published in December 2011 and is available at www.ofqual.gov.uk/files/2011-12-07-enquiries-about-results-2011.pdf

Appeals

If a centre has gone through the enquiries about results process and still believes a candidate's result is inaccurate, it can appeal to the awarding organisation. An appeal can be in relation to one or more candidates' grades, if they are all thought to be impacted by the same issue.

A centre must make an appeal within 14 days of receiving the outcome of the enquiry about results.

There are two stages in the appeals process:

- Stage 1 is a review of the case by a senior member of the awarding organisation who has not been involved previously with the particular case.
- Stage 2 is a presentation of the case to an appeals panel. The awarding organisation convenes the panel. It will comprise at least three members, one who must be independent (that means someone who is not, and has not been, a member of the awarding organisation's board or committees, or an employee or examiner at the awarding organisation, at any time during the previous five years). A centre can take the appeal to stage 2 only after going through stage 1.

Both stages should be completed within 50 working days of being lodged with the awarding organisation. But in some cases appeals are not resolved until after 50 days from initial receipt to allow a fair appeal hearing with appropriate evidence and individuals present from both the centre and awarding organisation.

Data source

The data are provided by the awarding organisations. The awarding organisations and regulators have a formal and agreed schedule for reporting on enquiries about results and appeals, which was introduced in 2003.

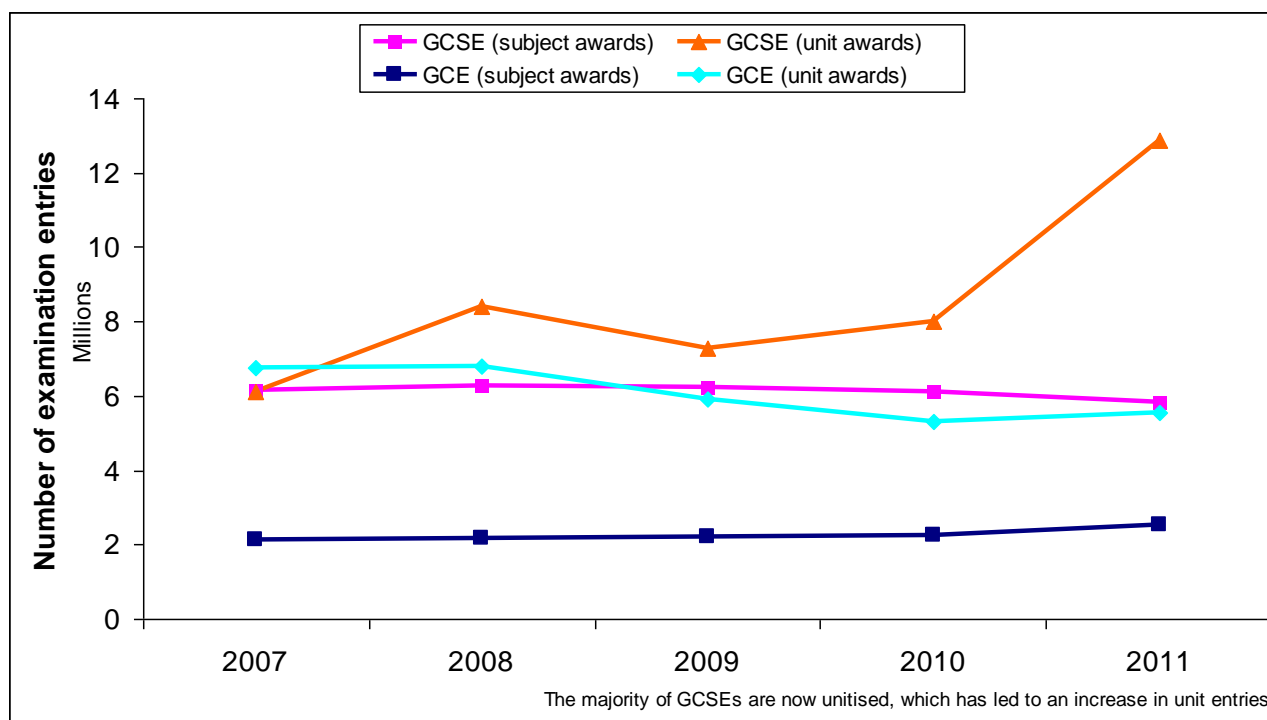

The Examinations Appeals Board

If a centre is dissatisfied with the outcome of the stage 2 appeal, it can apply to the Examinations Appeals Board (EAB) for a hearing. The EAB is independent of the awarding organisations and the regulators, and details of its work can be found at www.theeab.org.uk

Summer 2011 examination series

During the summer 2011 examination series, there were over 5.8 million GCSE subject entries and over 2.5 million GCE subject entries. At unit level, there were 12.9 million GCSE unit entries and 5.5 million GCE unit entries (see table 1 and figure 1).

Following the summer 2011 examination series, appeals were received for the two qualification types as shown below:

	GCSE appeals	GCE appeals
Stage 1 (review)	177	224
Stage 2 (appeals panel)	16	24

Stage 1 and stage 2 appeals

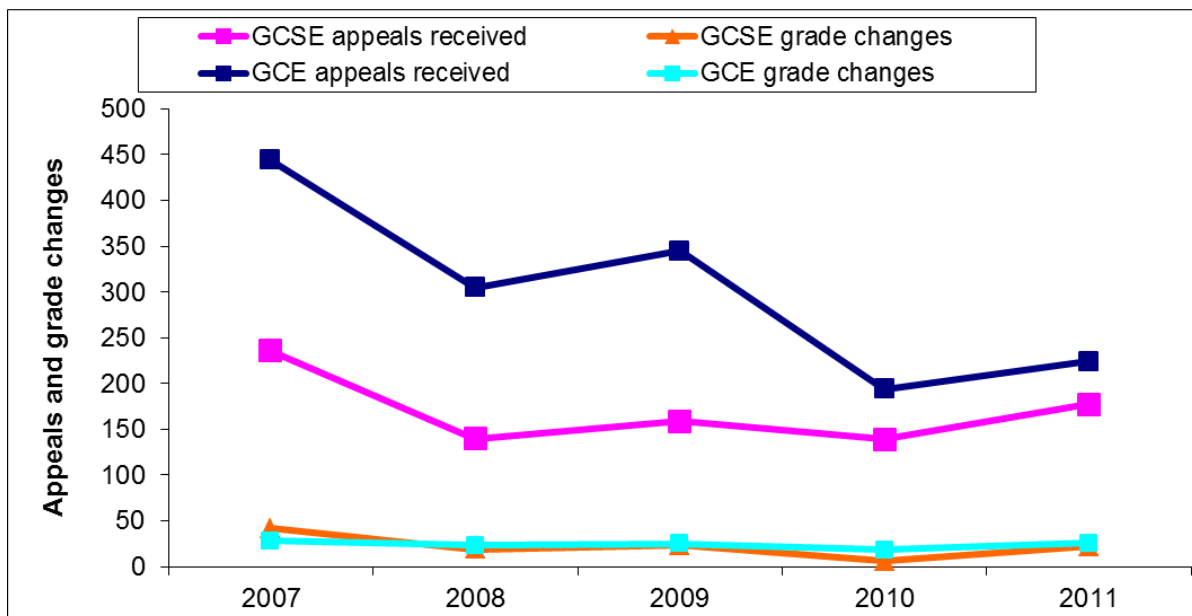

(See tables 2, 3 and 4, and figure 2)

Following the summer 2011 examination series there were 401 stage 1 appeals made against results, an increase of 20 per cent from 2010. At the time of writing 99 per cent of stage 1 appeals were completed. Seventy-one appeals were upheld by awarding organisations at stage 1. Of these, 44 resulted in changes to subject grades.

Of the stage 1 appeals, 40 went to a stage 2 appeal, an increase of 38 per cent from 2010. But this is consistent with the 41 stage 2 appeals received in 2009. Six of the stage 2 appeals were upheld in 2011, four of which resulted in changes to subject grades. When looking at the last five years, there has been a downward trend in the number of appeals received. The number of successful appeals resulting in grade changes has remained fairly consistent.

There were 12 stage 2 appeals that were not completed within the target timeline of 50 days from initial receipt.
