

National Reference Test

Each year from 2017
300x schools in England...

around 30x Year 11s
selected to take...

1 of 2
one hour tests

National test results

taken into account for

GCSE awarding

GCSE marks

GCSE grades
9 to 1

Key Stage 2
results

The National Reference Test is being introduced in 2017 to provide additional information to support the awarding of GCSEs. Trials in March 2016 will allow us to check processes ahead of the first live test in 2017.

Annual tests in maths and English will be taken by a sample of year 11 students in March each year. The test questions will remain largely the same from year to year. We will not be able to provide individual feedback to students and the results won't be used for accountability purposes.

Each year, around 300 schools in England will take part in the tests. At each school, around 30 students will take the English paper and around another 30 students will take the maths paper. The tests will take an hour to complete and will be administered and invigilated by the National Foundation for Educational Research.

We will publish national test results towards the end of August each year. Over time, the tests have the potential to provide a valuable additional source of information that may be taken into account when GCSEs are awarded.

Evidence for Excellence in Education