Arrangements to implement the national reference test

If you would prefer to respond online to this consultation please use the following link: <https://www.education.gov.uk/consultations>

Ofqual is introducing a national reference test to provide additional information to support the awarding of GCSEs. In March 2016, Ofqual will hold the preliminary reference test, a full-scale operational trial, and the first annual national reference test will take place in March 2017. The introduction of the tests is expected to contribute to setting standards in the new GCSEs. This consultation seeks views on proposed secondary legislation to require selected schools to take part in the test. This will help to ensure that the sample of pupils and schools that take part each year will be fully representative.

Information provided in response to this consultation, including personal information, may be subject to publication or disclosure in accordance with the access to information regimes, primarily the Freedom of Information Act 2000 and the Data Protection Act 1998.

If you want all, or any part, of your response to be treated as confidential, please explain why you consider it to be confidential.

If a request for disclosure of the information you have provided is received, your explanation about why you consider it to be confidential will be taken into account, but no assurance can be given that confidentiality can be maintained. An automatic confidentiality disclaimer generated by your IT system will not, of itself, be regarded as binding on the department.

The department will process your personal data (name and address and any other identifying material) in accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998, and in the majority of circumstances, this will mean that your personal data will not be disclosed to third parties.

Comments:

In accordance with the Equality Act 2010, public bodies must have “due regard”, when making decisions, to the need to eliminate discrimination, harassment, victimisation; advance equality of opportunity; and foster good relations, in relation to relevant protected characteristics. It would therefore be very helpful to understand if, in your view, there is any potential for the proposed legislation to have a disproportionate impact upon any pupil with relevant protected characteristics under the Equality Act 2010.

Ofqual has considered the impact of introducing the National Reference Tests. This is set out in its Board paper 68/14^[1].

We have set out in this consultation why making the test mandatory will help to ensure that the sample of pupils that take the test is nationally representative. Similarly, making the tests mandatory will ensure that pupils with a relevant protected characteristic are included in the overall sample and their performance is reflected in the National Reference Test results. If pupils with protected characteristics who were entered for GCSEs were excluded from taking the test or had the option not to take it, the test outcomes would not reflect the performance of the national GCSE cohort.

Ofqual's test supplier will provide similar reasonable adjustments for disabled pupils taking the National Reference Test that are available to disabled pupils when they take their GCSEs and similar access arrangements for pupils who have temporary injuries. For example, these will include large print and braille versions of the test, allowing extra time and the use of a scribe.

We propose to enable the head teacher to withdraw a pupil who has been selected to take the test. This ensures that, in exceptional circumstances, an individual pupil who would be disproportionately impacted due to having a protected characteristic were they to take the test, can be protected.

Every pupil who is asked to take the National Reference Test will be encouraged to do their best. However, unlike an exam for a qualification, the outcome of the test will have no direct impact on that individual pupil's GCSE results. The test is solely intended to measure performance nationally.

5 Do you think that the proposed secondary legislation has a disproportionate impact, positive or negative, on specific pupils, in particular those with 'relevant protected characteristics'?

The relevant protected characteristics are disability, gender reassignment, pregnancy and maternity, race, religion or belief, sex and sexual orientation.

All DfE public consultations are required to meet the Cabinet Office consultation principles.

The key consultation principles are:

- departments will follow a range of timescales rather than defaulting to a 12-week period, particularly where extensive engagement has occurred before
- departments will need to give more thought to how they engage with and use real discussion with affected parties and experts as well as the expertise of civil service learning to make well informed decisions
- departments should explain what responses they have received and how these have been used in formulating policy
- consultation should be 'digital by default', but other forms should be used where these are needed to reach the groups affected by a policy
- the principles of the Compact between government and the voluntary and community sector will continue to be respected

Completed responses should be sent by 22 January 2016.

Send by post to: Iain Cuthbert, 2nd Floor, Sanctuary Building, Great Smith Street
