³ The use of the term 'assessment objectives' in the Code appears to be different to that in the assessment strategy guidance and elsewhere in the regulatory framework. As used in the Code, the term refers to a specification and the term 'assessment criteria' seems to better mirror the term assessment objectives as used elsewhere.

3.7 – 3.9			The qualification level section on developing assessments states that assessment strategies should demonstrate how an AO develops individual questions/tasks and mark schemes.		There is no requirement outside the Code which states that achieving these outcomes is the responsibility of an evaluation committee.

There is no requirement outside the Code which states that achieving these outcomes is the responsibility of an evaluation committee.
3.12(i)-(iv)					There is no requirement outside the Code regarding rubrics.
3.12(v)	Condition G1.1 states that in setting an assessment for a qualification which it makes available, an AO must ensure that the content of the assessment is fit for purpose and consistent with the specification for that qualification.		The qualification and individual specification level sections on developing assessments state that assessment strategies should demonstrate how assessments meet the specification's content criteria.

3.12(vi)	Conditions G1.1(a) and (b) state that, in setting an assessment, an AO must ensure that its content is fit for purpose and appropriate for the method of assessment chosen.
3.12(vii)	Condition G3.2(c) states that an AO must ensure that the language used in assessments must be appropriate and must, in particular, be clear and unambiguous, except where ambiguity forms part of the assessment.
3.12(viii)	Condition G3.2(d) states that an AO must ensure that the language used in assessments must be appropriate and must, in particular, not be likely to cause unnecessary offence to learners.

3.12(ix)	Condition G1.1(a) states that, in setting an assessment, an AO must ensure that the content of that assessment is fit for purpose. Fitness for purpose includes validity and the definition of comparability indicates that predictability would threaten validity.		The individual specification level section on developing assessments states that assessment strategies should demonstrate how the questions/tasks (or question/task types) in a single assessment and over a number of consecutive exam series will mitigate the risk of predictability.

3.12(xiii)	Condition E4.2(g) states that in designing an assessment, an AO must ensure that the assessment allows assessors to be able to differentiate accurately and consistently between a range of attainments by learners.
3.12(xiv) – (xxi)	Condition G1.3 states that an AO must produce a mark scheme which sets out clear and unambiguous criteria against which learners' levels of attainment can be differentiated.		The qualification and individual specification level sections on developing assessments state that assessment strategies should outline procedures relating to the

The qualification level section on delivering assessments states that assessment strategies should demonstrate how an AO will promote uniform standards within and across centres through its moderation of non-examination assessments, including detailing how it determines and applies any adjustments to centre marked assessments.		There is no requirement outside the Code which states that in making adjustments to marks awarded by a centre an AO must not change that centre's rank order, unless the centre marks are demonstrably inconsistent.
5.25					There is no requirement outside the Code which states that statistical information must be used, where applicable, to inform an AO's final judgements on the marks awarded.

5.26 – 5.27 (see also discussion of Appendix 1 to the Code in Annex 8 below)	Condition H2.1 states that, where evidence generated by a learner in an assessment is marked by a centre, the AO must have in place clear and effective arrangements to undertake moderation of the assessment.		The qualification level section on delivering assessments states that assessment strategies should demonstrate how an AO will promote uniform standards within and across centres through its moderation of non-examination assessments, including detailing its sampling regime.		There is no requirement outside the Code which states that that an AO must use specific moderation techniques for particular qualifications, such as those outlined in Appendix 1 to the Code. 5.28	Condition C1.1 states that where an AO makes arrangements with a third party to undertake, on its behalf, any part of the development, delivery and award of qualifications it must ensure that those arrangements enable it to meet the Conditions. 5.29	Condition H2.1 states that where evidence generated by a learner in an assessment is marked by a centre, the AO must have in place clear and effective arrangements to undertake moderation of the assessment.				There is no requirement outside the Code in relation to the standardisation of moderators.
5.30					There is no requirement outside the Code which states that principal moderators, assistant principal moderators and team leaders must undertake some first-hand moderation of centres' assessments in

5.31					There is no requirement outside the Code which states that the standards applied by each moderator must be checked by a more senior moderator.
5.32	Condition H2.1 states that, where evidence generated by a learner in an assessment is marked by a centre, the AO must have in place clear and effective arrangements to undertake moderation of the assessment.				There is no requirement outside the Code which states that a senior moderator must complete a report for the AO on the work of each moderator. Likewise, there is no specific requirement that

There is no specific requirement outside the Code which states that an AO must provide centres that fail to meet its requirements with further guidance.
5.37	Condition A6.2 states that, where an AO has identified the risk of occurrence of any incident which could have an adverse effect, it must take all reasonable steps to (i) prevent the incident from occurring or, where it cannot be prevented, reduce the risk of that incident occurring, and (ii) prevent any adverse effect that the incident could have were it to				There is no requirement outside the Code which states that an AO must approve and monitor a centre's arrangements for assessment and standardisation where a
