

Access My Personal Learning Record

Personal Learning Record (PLR)

This is a single record of your achievements. The PLR holds both general and vocational qualification information.

For more information about the service, refer to Gov.UK “PLRs: useful information for learners and parents”.

Why can't I access My Personal Learning Record from National Careers Service website?

Previously, you were able to access your Personal Learning Record via the Life Long Learning Account known as the Learner Record. From the 25th October 2016, this specific service is being de-commissioned and will no longer be available from the National Careers Service website.

Read on, to see how you can still get a copy of your Personal Learning Record, following the steps below.....

How will you check my identity?

Fill in and post it to us a copy of the “My Personal Learning Record” form (appendix A, below), along with proof of your name and address.

We'll use the documents you post us to verify your identity. We'll match these to your Unique Learner Number and your achievement record, known as the Personal Learning Record.

You only need to do this once....

Once we've approved your request, you are able to request up to three copies in any given year.

You just need to.....

Fill in and post it to us a copy of the “Request another copy of My Personal Learning Record (PLR)” form (appendix B, below).

Unless your personal information changes, you don't need to provide proof of name and address as long we have previously verified your identity.

What happens if my personal information changes?

The only time you will be expected to re-apply and re-send proof of your name and address is if any of your personal details change ((name, surname or address). Under these circumstances we will need to verify your identity again.
