

CONNEXIONS RESOURCE CENTRE INDEX

USER GUIDE

Spring 2008

Connexions Resource Centre Index

The Connexions Resource Centre Index was designed with young people and practitioners to help file, store and easily retrieve information on a variety of subjects. The index is separated into two sections:

General Information – this section is broken down into 11 headings:

The Work and Training section has lots of information on different jobs. The occupational information is broken down into 23 main job families. Each one is represented by a different icon and heading and is used to store information relating to jobs in that particular sector.

Since Spring 2006, more than 25 new job titles have been added and over 75 changes made to the Connexions Resource Centre Index. At the time of printing, the Index contains 815 job titles. It is fully aligned with the jobs4u database which continues to be updated online at www.connexions-direct.com/jobs4u.

This User Guide supports the introduction of Diplomas and 14-19 Area Prospectuses. The Diplomas are new qualifications for 14 to 19 year olds, combining theoretical study with practical experience to provide the skills and experience relevant to young people entering employment, training or higher education today. Your 14-19 Area Prospectus lists which Diploma courses are available in your area. Information on how to access the 14-19 Area Prospectuses can be found at www.dcsf.gov.uk/14-19.

How to find information

In both sections of the Index, information is filed alphabetically, which is in line with what young people requested. The Index is designed to be simple and straightforward.

In the Work and Training section, job titles have been included in the job family that best represents the occupational sector they fall under. For example:

- If you were looking for information on how to become a Librarian, then you should think about what librarians do. As they mainly work with books and information this job title can be found under:

Languages, Information and Culture

- Some jobs can be found in many sectors, for example Project Manager. As most jobs of this nature are based in an office environment then they are filed under:

Administration, Business and Office Work

Some careers will not be as obvious. Where there is not a specific sector for the job you may be interested in, you should think about what the training route is likely to include. For example:

- The training for a job such as Civil Engineering Technician concentrates more on building than engineering. Although there is an Engineering job family, you would find this job title under:

Building and Construction

The rest of this booklet contains the complete Index and examples of where to find related job information.
